GRAY POWER IN THE COURTROOM

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The day after she is certified as a paralegal by George Washington University's Institute of Law and Aging, 72-year-old Eunice Madison will appear in the U.S. Court of Appeals with her suit against the city school system--because, she says, she was fired from her 14-year position as an educational psychologist due to her age. One of the GW courses she found most helpful was "Age Discrimination in Employment."

"There's nothing like learning the law by living a case," says the long-time D.C. resident. She has lived on Clifton St., NW, for the past 20 years, not far from Cardozo High, one of five schools she supervised in a 14-year, two-month career the school system itself described as "creditable service."

Paralegal is just the latest in a long line of careers for Madison, one of nine children born to Finnish immigrants in Chisholm, Minn. She has been an auditor in the General Accounting Office, a management analyst, a statistician--and a Japanese dancer. Madison has travelled around the world twice and holds degrees from the University of Minnesota (BA '60, BS '61, and MEd '62).

Twenty-two other senior citizens graduate from the paralegal program with Madison on June 11. She read about the program in a local paper less than a year after her August 1979 termination, when her despair was almost unbearable. But, she says, "Here was a place that wanted me because I was old."

GW OFFERS CLEP REVIEW COURSE

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- A review course for the College Level Examination Program (CLEP) will be offered by George Washington University on five consecutive Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., July 11 through August 8.

Participants receive an intensive review of test material and become familiar with exam format and test-taking strategy. Sample testing identifies problem areas and reinforces strengths. Advice about which CLEP exams are most appropriate for each person will be available.

CLEP is a nationwide program which makes it possible to obtain college credits by examination, providing students with a head start on degree programs and saving them both time and tuition. GW, for example, accepts up to 30 credit hours from CLEP exams passed at approximately the 50th percentile.

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- "Evenings at the Museum," a one-week workshop offered by George Washington University's School of Education and Human Development, will explore some of the more unusual collections, artifacts and museums in the Washington area. FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CHARLOTTE CONABLE NAMED TO NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Charlotte W. Conable, coordinator of public policy projects for The George Washington University Women's Studies Program and Policy Center, has been appointed to the National Advisory Council for the White House Conference on Aging to be held Nov. 29 - Dec. 3.

Conable is one of 58 members of the advisory council; the conference is expected to draw 2,000 delegates and 1,000 official observers, some from abroad. The conference agenda includes developing a comprehensive national policy on aging regarding income, health, housing, quality of life and achieving an age-integrated society.

An expert on the concerns of aging women, Conable conducted a series of workshops entitled "Growing Older Female: The Needs and Resources of Aging Women" at the United Nation's Mid-Decade World Conference for Women in Copenhagen, Denmark, last summer. "Aging is definitely a women's issue," says Conable, "since women make up the largest share of the aging population." Today, life expectancy in the U.S. for women is 74 and for men, 67.

Conable also has written a comprehensive report called "Older Women: The Economics of Aging," which was published recently, profiling aging women according to race, marital status, income and living arrangements.

Recently she attended the North American Regional Technical Meeting on Aging to prepare for the 1982 World Assembly on Aging sponsored by the United Nations.
